Studying Trees:

Damage & Wounds

Tree's that are cut / damaged either by humans or natural causes, 'heal' by producing new tissue to cover the wound. This is called occlusion.

Wound occlusion is often paler and smoother. Harvesting wood correctly allows the tree the opportunity to better occlude the wound.

Natural damage - lightening strikes can cause a long, thin furrow from tip to base.

TinderSticks

Follow us on Facebook @tindersticksc ic

More info: www.tindersticks.org.uk